The Cave of the Winds.

The Chariot of Manitou as it ascended to the upper surface. Its hills are honeycombed with deep and spacious caverns, yawning abysses and subterranean passages, and there are beauties hid in each dark recesses to which nothing else in nature compare. Yesterday a GAZETTE reporter explored the Cave of the Winds in company with a party of tourists, and he saw more to wonder at and admire in one short hour than could be found in a many days journey. The Cave of the Winds is approached by way of Williams Canon, and its entrance is the most wonderful and picturesque of anywhere in the world. It is high up above the roadway, and is approached by a recently rising trail which leads to the foot of a long and crooked stairway built between perpendicular walls of rock, joined together by a natural roof, with two circular and almost perfectly formed openings through which the genial light of heaven descends. No one can repress a feeling of awe while standing within this stupendous and wonderfully formed castle, and the fatigue already experienced in the ascent is forgotten in the excitement of preparing anything to forego another climb through one of the cliff, where a view of surpassing grandeur is obtained.

On entering the cave the visitor is greeted by a strong draught of wind from some subterranean air shaft. Hence the name of the caverns. This is soon passed, and a narrow winding passage is followed, now ascending, now descending, until a sudden widening is reached, and the visitor stands in Cascade hall, a room fifty feet high, of about equal length, and thirty feet wide. Here the panorama of wonders begins to unroll. In one end is what appears to be an immense cascade of crystal waters, and the ceilings are hung with large stalactites reaching downward and at times assuming fleecy consistency. The formations are of carbonate of lime, constructed by the gradual action of water through countless ages, and are beautiful in the extreme.

Canopy hall is next reached, an immense room, fully 300 feet long, the lower level overhung with an immense and gracefully drooping canopy, own hands, decorated him with the The room is profusely ornamented and queen figures are met on every hand. There are the stalactite niche, bed of cauliflowers, jay curtain, frescoed ceiling, lake basin, bat's wing, xenophone fringe of stalactites, prairie dog village, fairy scene, etc.

Large reflectors are placed in all the principal rooms of the cave, and at times the guide burns something creating an illumination resembling calcium lights, which adds much to the effect and brilliancy of the scene.

A narrow, tortuous passage, called Boston avenue, leads to Music hall, one of the most beautiful of the group. Its ceilings are indented in regular arches, panels and domes, and are beautifully frescoed in many colors.

On every side, in the rooms and hallways, are large and small stalactites, and stalagmites in profusion, hanging tantalizingly on the tips of many of the former may be seen large and sparkling drops of lime water. A drop falls at regular intervals of about half an hour on the points of the stalactites below and thus the work of exquisite decoration still goes on with the slowness and deliberation of eternity.

High up in this wonderful palace is the Hall of Beauty, and never was word more properly applied. Smaller rooms, known as the Bridal Chamber, Conservatory, etc., open into it. The hall is garnished with statuary, and some are so perfect as to provoke a flash of doubt that nature had shaped it all. A niche known as the museum is the most wonderful place in the hall. Here is a heterogeneous mass of delicately formed figures representing human beings and other animate life writhing in extravagant attitudes and symmetrical confusion. Sportive twirlings and agonized contortions are plainly depicted, and the picture has very properly been named Dante's Inferno.

The Crystal Palace or Conservatory of Crystal Flowers is the crowning glory of all. Here are encrustations some white, some translucent or tinted, rivaling the ...latest coral of the most beautiful ...natural flowers. The colored lights ...ceiling ... a scene ...of enchanting loveliness. The nature of the formations is very plain. Professors have stood upon it ground and admitted their inability to explain the phenomenon and it never fails to give delight to all visitors.

At the First Methodist Episcopal church the Rev. Dr. S. A. Chamberlain will preach in the morning, and the pastor, Rev. A. C. Peck, in the evening.

Dr. O. M. White, who has recently opened dental parlors in this city in the building opposite the postoffice inserts an advertisement in this morning's issue.

The match game of cricket between Colorado Springs and Denver will probably be played on the 18th inst. The club meets for practice Monday and Friday.

Major Otis Remick, agent of the Northwestern Life Insurance Co., in this city, returned yesterday from the meeting of the company's agents at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The major also visited a number of the larger cities in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

There will be a dime social at the residence of Mr. Thomas Barber, No. 513 South Cascade avenue to-morrow evening. The social is given by the Good Templars of this city and opens up the lovers [illegible] by the late [illegible] given by the society.

Conroy's electric clock exhibition closed a most successful engagement in this city last night giving excellent satisfaction to all who attended it. Mr. Conroy will take the exhibition to Manitou and will place it in a great pavilion [illegible] He will no doubt draw large audiences.

It was remarked on the streets yesterday that [illegible] and Colorado House and a wholesale grocery house of Dallas, Texas, had submitted propositions to capitalists in this city by which if they would locate suitable store buildings they would remove to this city.

Word was received in this city last night that Sheriff Jackson had recovered one of the horses taken from the stock of M. L. Horr on Wednesday night, at some point in Manitou Park. Mr. Jackson is still in pursuit of the thieves and the remaining horses. He is convinced that there are at least two of the thieves.

A game of tennis played on the grounds of Camp Harding yesterday afternoon between James Cravens and Lew Archer, of Kansas City, and M. C. Hoag of Chicago, and Geo. C. Harding, resulted in a score of 3 to 7 in favor of the latter. The boys feel somewhat proud of their victory, as the two first named players have a reputation as tennis players.

Work upon the new road to Manitou over the Moss is being actively prosecuted, and it will be completed in a short time. The road will probably be called Erway avenue after Mr. H. S. Erway, who has been most prominent in pushing the work. The handsomest residence street of the city of Dallas, Texas, is called Erway avenue, and was named in honor of Mr. Erway at the time he was mayor of that city. The new road, when completed, will be the most direct one of the city.

Hugh Fay and Billy Barry would hardly appear in Colorado Springs to a small audience and last night was no exception, for although they had been seen here so recently in their new play, "McKenna's Flirtation," yet every seat in the opera house was taken. Their new play is a good one and the company with them at present is the best they have ever had in the west. Perhaps two men never worked together on the stage than these two. Their physical appearance and their methods of acting are so radically different that they fill up and round out an evening's entertainment until the spectator leaves the house with that sense of satisfaction which many other really good entertainments fail to give. They are the positive and negative of Irish comedy and when the [illegible] are full and good humor abound.

An enterprise recently established in El Paso county and that will employ a large number of men intimately by the means of distributing large sums of money is the Western Coal and Mining company. The company's mines are located near what is now known as Elbert, but what the name of the [illegible] will be has not yet been decided. The company has [illegible] of Denver, Mr. [illegible] of Kansas City, Mr. [illegible] of Topeka, Mr. [illegible] of Chicago, and Mr. [illegible] of Kansas City, Mo., as its directors. The company will begin the construction of a branch from its main line to these coal fields, showing that the company has faith in their as coal producers. The branch will leave the [illegible] what is known as the "big gate" of Mettler, Hagey & Mullin's pasture. The principal office of the company will be located in this city.

Mr. A. J. Dana was in town yesterday raising money to invest in the purchase of a [illegible] to be used at Fountain for the Harrison and Morton club. It is expected that Fountain will give one hundred republican votes this fall. The republicans of that city should assist Mr. Dana in this matter, and thus encourage the republicans in the outside precincts.
